

Prof. Dr. Björn Frank

MAGKS course Experimental Economics

October 15-19, 2018

This is the plan: We meet on Monday (October 15th) and try to make up an experiment. I will definitely not come with an own plan for an experiment. Nothing will be prepared before; I will initiate and moderate your joint creative efforts and possibly give some input if necessary. We'll speak English on that occasion if necessary.

On Tuesday, we discuss details of the experiment and write the instructions (in German, but it is okay if German is a foreign language for some workshop participants). The experiment will take place on Wednesday. Subjects will be first semester students of economics. On the same day, we start analyzing the data; if you have STATA or other statistical software on your laptop, please bring it with you. On Thursday we start writing a paper on the experiment (in English). On Friday we will hopefully have a first draft. There is absolutely no guarantee that this will become publishable, but let's try.

You will receive supplementary material (stuff on experimental economics in general) a few weeks before the workshop.

The maximum number of participants is 10; until this number is reached, registration is possible via email to frank@uni-kassel.de
